GREAT SURGICAL OPERATION.

The following account of the most formidable operation of "Amputation of the lower jaw bone it its joint," successfully performed in this city by Professo Baxley, of the University of Maryland, has been banded to us by a medical gentleman who was present on the occasion, and upon whose accuracy of description we can confidently rely. While we rejoice to learn that the occasions for such an operation are rare, we are also gratified to learn that we possess the skill adequate to the undertaking when the duty is required.

"Mrs. O. of this city, had for the last 10 months laboured under a disease of the face, which had resisted the curative means of several physicians whose professional and had been sought, and which rapidly increased until it threatened to destroy life in a few weeks. The right side of her facewas occupied by a tumor extending from the prominence of the cheek bone downward below the edge of the lower jaw, and from the right angle of the mouth to the ear, embracing the right half of the lower jaw, and from the right angle of the bower jaw, and from the right angle of the lower jaw, and from the right angle of the bower jaw, and from the right angle of the bower jaw, and from the right angle of the bower jaw, and from the right angle of the bower jaw and from the right half of the lower jaw and from the right half of the owner jaw from the chin to its posterior marking and up to the socket where this bone unites to the bone of the temple, extending backward into the mouth as far as the palate and tonsils, upward by the side of the tongue, which was pushed not occupied by the tumor was so filled up by the long as to render chewing impracticable, and he wallowing even of fluids difficult.

The patient, however, and not so repulsive an operation, and her friends aring learned that certain tumours of the face at been relieved by tying the artery of the neck one, and being informed that such was a preliming step to the operation proposed by Dr. Baxley, pressed a desire to have that done, in the hope at the circulation being cut off, the tumor might appear.

The third and concluding step of this extraor-dinary operation was the dissection of the remain-ing part of the tumor, from its attachment to the upper jaw and roof of the mouth, and as far back as the throat, which was speedily completed. Such was the astonishing firmness and self com-posure of the suffering patient, that she uttered no complaint nor offered a struck drives with a re-complaint, nor offered a struggle during either op-eration; and if unparallelled endurance on the part of the patient and unsurpassed coolness and skill on the part of the surgeon in performing this deli-cate operation can insure recovery, the prospect of Mrs. O. is extremely flattering. We learn on in-quiry, that she is now—four days after the opera-tian—doing well. ian-doing well.

It is stated in Cooper's Surgical Dictionary, for

It is stated in Cooper's Surgical Dictionary, for 1836, that small portions of the lower jaw have been removed by several eminent surgeons, but the great operation of amputating this jaw at the chin and its joint, has never been performed either in Europe or America, except by the distinguished Dr. Mott, of New York, and Dr. Cossack of Dublin. One other case is mentioned by Delpeau in which "M. Græfe of Berlin, one of the most calebrated surgeons of Germany deared to direction." celebrated surgeons of Germany, dared to disarti-culate the lower jaw 22 as in the present case.
