LATEST FROM EUROPE.

By the arrival of the packet-ship Emerald, Capt. Howe, from Havre, we have our Paris letter of the evening of the 7th of January, and Havre of the 9th—the day on which the Emerald sailed.

Correspondence of Commercial Advertiser.

PARIS, Jan. 7, 1841.

Never was our political atmosphere more serene than at present. Not a breath of air stirring. The moral, like the physical world, has its succession of tempest and calm.

The probabilities of war seem to diminish, and I think it not unlikely, that France will yield to the remonstrances of the allied powers, and quietly diminish her armament without the fact being generally made known. Every year the military term of service of from sixty to seventy thousand soldiers expires, and they are entitled to their discharge—a large number of the garrison of Paris has been just diminished from this cause, so that the government may avail itself of this progressive diminution to weaken her numerical force by delaying to fill up the ranks.

Count d'Appony on the part of the Austrian Government has been instructed to declare to the French Cabinet that the Aulic Council considers the maintenance of a standing army of 500,000 men in France, in addition to a million of National Guards, who are capable of being mobilized for active service, as incompatible with the pacific protestations of the new cabinet, and that the parties to the treaty of July 15, wishing to put an end to the position in which they are placed by the equivocal conduct of France, have decided on taking measures to constrain her to give to her policy a decided character. The minister of foreign affairs is understood to have replied that being convinced of the policy of preserving the peace of Europe, he would make every effort to attain this object, and hoped above all things that the Chamber would make difficulties in voting the sum required for maintaining an army of 500,000 men; but that the ministers, having found the armaments prepared on their accession to power, dared not suspend them abruptly or reduce the army as long as France remained isolated.

Our eyes are now turned upon the new revolutionary government of Spain, which, according to our letters this morning, is not revolutionary enough for the mobocracy of that nation. A report was yesterday prevalent on change that Espartero had been overturned by a new revolutionary movement, and that a republic had been proclaimed. There is every reason to believe that the intelligence is unfounded, although there is secret agitation among the people for producing a more popular government than the present. Espartero although at the head of a regency which was forced upon the acceptance of the Queen previous to her abdication, is nevertheless the supporter of royalty in the person of the infant Queen Isabella; but a serious division exists among the regents, three of whom are of radical tendency, having the support of the ancient juntas or municipalities, and those of new formation in the most important cities. This Party is also supported in Madrid by Calatrava, a late minister, and several members of his cabinet, and has many adherents in the army.

Its object is to prevent the monarchical Espartero from being virtually the regent; it therefore wishes to join to him two other regents, by which he would be left in a minority.

The policy of the French cabinet as to the Spanish revolutionary government is no longer a matter of speculation or doubt. M. Guizot in the Chamber of Peers has recognized the present state of affairs in Spain as being established de jure and de facto.

The Regency has suppressed many of the monastical establishments in Guipuzcoa. The chief fueros provinces have been treated with for such modification of their privileges as was required to give increased unity to the Spanish nation. Navarre was the first who gave way. Guipuzcoa has now yielded.

In consequence of the amnesty granted to the Spanish political refugees by the constitutional government of Spain, no farther subsidies have been granted by the French government since the 1st of January. By this measure it will be relieved of the burden of maintaining thirty thousand of these rebel Carlists.

The speculations about the possibility of a treaty between Russia and France have at length turned out to be mere moonshine. The diplomatic communication of the Emperor Nicholas to his ambassador here, intended for the perusal of the French cabinet, is now understood to be a mere matter of courtly etiquette, to express the regret of the Russian cabinet that France had deemed it necessary to keep aloof from the other powers, and to invite her to resume her rank and influence in the councils of Europe.

The correspondence from Poland represents the Emperor as preparing an army of 150,000 men and 420 field pieces for next March. The defeat of the Russians in Circassia, on the borders of the Black Sea, which I have already reported as not sufficiently confirmed, is now beyond all doubt. The fortress of Ghelendick, garrisoned by 5000 Russians, has been been taken by storm, with immense loss on both sides. When the Russian navy in the vicinity perceived that the Circassians had taken possession, they commenced a discharge from their ships until the fortress was razed to the ground, involving even their own garrison in the common destruction. The Russians have now no possession in Circassia but the fort of Anapa.

The exact number of the deaths in the army of Algeria, in the month of November, amounts to 1598 non-commissioned officers and soldiers, and 10 officers, which if taken as the average of the year, would make upwards of 19,000 deaths in an army of 70,000 men. The number of the sick in the hospitals is 11,000.

The expedition projected against Morocco for the purpose of obtaining satisfaction of the Emperor for an insult to the consul, will not set out till an unfavorable answer should be received to an ultimatum of the French Government. In such a case the consul and other French subjects will be first brought away by a government steamer.

The Funeral ceremony of translating the ashes of Napoleon has proved fatal to a great many of the spectators, on account of the intense cold of the day on which it took place. The beards of the dandy National Guards men were one mass of ice, and similar accounts are received of the severity of the weather in other parts of Europe. Three thousand persons are said to have died of cold in Sweden. In Bohemia and Moravia all the ponds were frozen to the bottom and the fish died. Birds and game in the forest met with the same fate, and one report gives the extraordinary number of 80,000 head of horned cattle frozen to death in Hungary.
