unquestionable. The Banks have been consured for often lending too much of their means to foreign speculation, but no man ever yet charged them with being wholly given up to external trade. As we remarked last week, we agree with the Examiner on the point that our trade has been overdone, but we ascribe it less to the Banks than he does. They were stimulated by the trading community, nor ethan they stimulated; and both had fair seeming grounds of action. Whe that casually observed the vast amount of produce sent here for transhipment to England during three or four successive years, so that our stores and wharves were blocked up by it, and flour in imalense quantities lay out sheltered only by a few boards, and our forwarders had to give public notice that they could receive no more, would not admit that our traders have no more, would not admit that our traders have not been quite so foothardy as some would now represent them to have been. We warned them at the time that the trade was one which could not last, but we were not herded. All were not been quite so foolbardly as some would now represent them to lave been. We warned them at the time that the trade was one which could not last, but we were not heeded. All were grasping at the golden chain which seemed endless. The change that we foresaw has come, and the overtrading is now apparent to all; but let us not be so profuse in our censures, either of the Banks or the traders, for the circumstances of the times furnish an apology.

Moreover, we do not think that the present state of trade in the province is to be taken as a fair standard of calculation for an average of years. We think it is now below the average, perhaps as much as our trade has been above it for some years heretofere. One reason for thinking so is that the English market for our great staples is now below an average of years, and it affects ours. The Examiner seems to think that our trade will continue in its present depressed state and even go lower. We do not, although it may be some years before it becomes what it has been. How king or short the intervening, beyond our control. How long or short the intervening period may be depends on circumstances partly beyond our control. When the Euglish markets shall rise, as they assuredly will sooner or later. Ours will rise also; and as they rise, trade will increase therewith, and will require corresponding facilities for effecting exchanges. Whether these facilities be furnished by the Banks, or by private individuals, makes but little difference, so far as the country is concerned. The former get all they can; the latter do the same; and if there are shaving Banks, there are also shaving brokers, the latter the worse of the two. We have not much expectation that the embarrassment caused partly by overtrading, will operate to check it longer than is necessary for the dishere are shaving Banks, there are also shaving brokers, the latter the worse of the two. We have not much expectation that the embarrassment caused partly by overtrading, will operate ocheck it longer than is necessary for the disrecovered youth. A course of rigid economy and strict industry is rendered necessary for the country to relieve itself from debt; and if we were wise it would be persevered in from choice when no longer compelled by necessity; but we

On our first page we have placed the By-Laws passed by the District Council at its late session. More care should be taken in drawing ap these documents. The first section of the By-Law relating to the salary of the District Surveyor, enacts, "That the clause let of By-Law No. IV. as far as relates to the salary of District Surveyor, from and after the passing of this By-Law, shall be twenty-five pounds currency per annum," &c. It is here enacted that the "clause first shall be fiventy-five pounds currency!" The Council will never want money while they can make a "clause" into £25. But the District Surveyor will probably chieget taking the District Surveyor will probably object taking that "clause" in payment of his salary.

Below will be found an account of the destruction by fire of the village of Boucherville, 10 miles below Montreal. A requisition, most numerously and respectably signed, has been presented to the Mayor of Kingston for a Public Meeting to devise measures in aid of the sufferers by this disastrous fire, and Alderman Benson, in the Mayor's absence, has called the Meeting for to-morrow at noon.

Among the properly destroyed were three fine stone stores belonging to Messrs. Roy and Trudelle, whose loss must be very great. A valuable horse was consumed in one of the outbuildings of these stores. The other store-keepers whote properties were burnt are Cautier, Amie Dugas, and Collette. We ought not to forget to mention that his We cught not to forget to mention that his Worship the Mayor has exhibited the greatest interest on behalf of the sufferers. It was on his responsibility that the Lady Colborne went down on Tuesday night, and of the provisions taken to the village the next morning a large portion was obtained by his means. Five-and twenty barrels of flour were also, we understand, contributed by the Hon. Mr. Lafontsine.

On an occasion such as this it would be a work of supererogation to appeal to the charit-work of supercrogation to appeal to the charit-able feelings of the public. Every human heart can enter unnyited into the distresses of those poor people who, from a comparative state of in-dependence are care without still a static of independence, are cast without stick or stake upon the world. Many a head that on Monday even-ing reposed on a comfortable pillow will long know what it is to want that luxury, unless the charity of the more fortunate befriend them. But, God be thanked, this is a Christian com-munity where where were munity where, whatever petry differences may at times divine us, our education, our feelings, and our religion tach us to stand by one another. As the good Samaritan raised up the traveller who had fallen among thieves, and administrated to his confers. tered to his comforts, so is it our duty to repair as far as is possible the misfortune which has fallen upon the poor villagers of Boucherville.

According to the observations made on the spot, there aspear to have been nearly sixty houses destroyed, and it is calculated that not less than one hundred and fifty poor families are hus deprived of their dwellings.

We have already mentioned that on the morning subsequent to the fire, Plis Worship the May, or proceeded to Boucherville, carrying with him lour, pork, and bread, for the unfortunate sufferts. On his arrival at Boucherville, a Commit-ce of the principal inhabitants was immediately ormed to receive the provisions and superintend heir distribution.
