KINGSTON HERALD.

KINGSTON, TUESDAY, AUGUST 8, 1843.

The Corporation met again last Tuesday night to divide the remainder of the £3000 among themselves and their friends, and they left not the ghost of a farthing to disturb their sleep. They had been unable to rest at night since the idea of getting the money haunted them, and when the first obstruction was thrown in their way, two of the Councimen especially showed by their chaggard looks how much they needed money. They have got it. They have taken the lion's share, and staved off the evil day a little longer. It is said that they intend to have the notes discounted at the Bank at the end of three months, and so leave the Bank to deal with the parties if they do not pay at maturity. We doubt that the Council will do this with all the notes. They may do it with the notes of private doubt that the Council will do this with all the notes. They may do it with the notes of private individuals, but they will leave their own to be paid when convenient, like the old notes, now long over due. But should they have these notes discounted, the saving by lending the money will be restricted to £22 10s.! showing what was the true reason for lending it. The pretence was to save the interest, but the true reason was to relieve their own necessities. The vanued saving of £360 dwindles down to a trivature of the saving of £360 dwindles down to a trivature of the saving of £360 dwindles down to a trivature of the saving of £360 dwindles down to a trivature of the saving of £360 dwindles down to a trivature of the saving of £360 dwindles down to a trivature of the saving of £360 dwindles down to a trivature of the saving of £360 dwindles down to a trivature of the saving of £360 dwindles down to a trivature of the saving of £360 dwindles down to a trivature of the saving of £360 dwindles down to a trivature of the saving by lending the monotonic of the saving by lending the monotonic of the saving by lending the saving by vaunted saving of £300 dwindles down to a trifle, and the actual moving cause in this most discreditable business is declared to be their own extreme need of money. Faithful guardians are they! strict trustees of public funds! consulting their own interest and convenience first of all, and making a pretended saving the stalking horse thereto.

The 'News' has published the evidence taken before the Coroner's Inquest on Morrison, and remarks on it that the evidence in Mr. Thibodo's favor is contradictory. The variations in this part of the evidence relate solely to time, and as part of the evidence relate solely to time, and as the time was only guessed at, some variation was unavoidable, so that the remark of the News is frivolous. There are greater variations as to time in the evidence against Mr. Thibodo than there are in the evidence for him, but we took no notice of that. For instance, Bibby says the time of the boy's death was a little after 9 o'clock; but Lindsay says it was near 10. Such variations as these are of no importance. One man estimates the time a quarter of an hour sooner than it probably was, and another a trussooner than it probably was, and another a quarsooner than it probably was, and another a quarter later; but we can arrive pretty near the truth by comparing the different accounts, and correcting one by another.

The contradictions in the evidence against Mr. Thibodo are of a very different character, consisting of contradictions in facts which the parties must have known,—not in time, at which they could give only a tolerable guess. When Hurst swears that when he went to the place Mr. Thibodo was there, and nort swears that Mr. Mr. Thibodo was there, and next swears that Mr. T. came there afterwards, round Bone's corner; swears that it was an hour between Mr. T. telling the men to fire and their actual firing, and next swears it was only 5 or 10 minutes; and swears he did not know Mr. Thibodo before that swears he did not know Mr. Thibodo before that night, and next swears that he did,—he contradicts himself so far as to invalidate the whole of his evidence. Some of the statements must be false, and therefore none can be relied on, for the man who swears three false statements would just as soon swear three hundred.
