THE THRELESS THAMP

Indiana Movementac Who Has Walked More Than Sixty Thousand Miles.

Several months ago we chronicled for the Enquirer an account of one John Owen pider, who at that time had been walking at least eighteen hours a day for eighteen onths, and travelling at the rate of five miles an hour, or eighty miles in twenty-four, says a Hartford letter. Now it is over two years since he commenced his tireless tramp, and, instead of resting from his upparalleled walk, on he goes, and instead of slacking his speed he has increased it, until he is as fleet of foot as a deer. Over two years ago he was seized with the hallucination that three layers had suddenly and as mysteriously formed on the soles of his feet, and he reasoned in his diseased mind or imagination that no remedy other than walking would ever remove them. He at once took up the line of march in the rear of his dwelling-on his farm, seven miles southeast of this city-walking in a circle from right to left. At first he walked with measured tread, and would converse with neighbors and friends rationally upon any topic except the mania that had taken pos session of him, and no advice, device or restraint could be brought into requisition to induce him to forego his tramp. As time went on his speed was accelerated and the house of tramping increased, until eighteen hours of every twenty-four found him walking about his beaten track. His meals were handed to him, and he ate as he walked. He never removed his clothing but about 2 a.m. he occupies a chair near his circle provided for him, and at once falis asleep. At 5 o'clock promptly he is again upon summer and fall, in all kinds of weather however inclement, he may be found out of doors, going about the circle long since established, at a rate of speed that is marvelous. His mind is clear upon all subjects but the strange hallucination that has warped and dwarfed his better judgment. After having tramped about for a year or more he conceived the idea that 50,000 miles of travel were necessary in order to relieve him of the peculiar malady that afflicted him, but now he has travelled nearly 60,000, and his speed is quickened his pace accelerated and hours of walking increased. His disposition is melancholy in character, yet at times he enjoys the jokes and jests of friends who call upon him. He was sent to the asylum a year ago, walked all the time while on the cars, continued his tramp during his stay at the asylum, and when returned home as harmless made the same journey as going. During his stay in this city waiting for the train he walked about the court house yard. Hundreds of citizens were attracted to the scene to witness the strange procedure. When restrained from walking his feet alternately were lifted from the ground. He avers that if he would stop walking his limbs and body would fly into a thousand fragments. He never seemingly grows hungry, never asks for food or drink, and eats and drinks whatever is given him uccomplainingly, all the time continuing his endless round. His limbs are as firm as iron and the tendons like whipeord. He is a man of more than ordinary intelligence. His domestic relahions are such as to preclude the idea of his malady originating from domestic diff. culties, and no assignable cause is known for the strange and unaccountable freak gifted with powers of divination, and can
