

THE DORTCH
B. LOVERN,
FARMERSVILLE, OHIO, MAR. 18, 1887.

FARMERSVILLE AND VICINITY,

Mrs. CHAS. TACKABERRY is recovering from her recent serious illness. The services in Christ's Church on Easter Sunday were tasteful and appropriate.

We are pleased to learn that Mrs. Abel Stevens, who has been very ill during the past few weeks, is now convalescent.

Mr. COXWELL, our popular high school teacher, visited friends in Toronto and Niagara during the short Easter vacation.

The Rev. Mr. PELLER occupied the Presbyterian pulpit on Sunday evening. We are pleased to say that the reverend gentleman will most probably reside in Farmersville.

Mr. G. C. CLARK, minister of Chantey, was visiting his sister at Oak Terrace, yesterday. He leaves to-day for Syracuse, N. Y., where he takes a respite before returning to his charge.

In addition to the services in the Methodist Church, which were well-attended, services to meet a well-delivered recitation by Miss Flora Slack and musical exercises played organ solo by Miss Le Allason.

This week the steers have received a valuable medal and a beautifully engraved diploma from the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, in recognition of Farmersville's contributions to the Ontario educational exhibition.

The Easter services in the Baptist Church were entirely floral, and were much enjoyed by all who saw them. They were the result of the labor of the ladies of the Baptist and Presbyterian congregations.

A service was held in aid of Christ's Church Mission School, with take place on Friday next in the North Church. Supper will be served at 8 o'clock, for which an excellent meal and variety programme will be furnished. Admission 20 cents; child admission 12 half price.

At the close of services, the pastor led the children away on Easter Sunday. The pastor inside the altar railings was dressed in full color, and the children sang in the following hymns, induced by a desire to distract the old man's mind.

Mr. Groulx has light machinery for doing fine work on bee-hives or any other article in that line. His business is located in Farmersville, which may be easily known by the fact that he has a valuable information on advertising to those who buy his work.

On Saturday last a young man passed and damage was discovered before a bench in the church. The piano, which was in the parsonage, and the defences of Mr. J. H. Percival, who are accused of the robbery of Bassard, or rather it would be more correct, to say that they live in proximity. The piano is understood to show that it was broken, as it was placed on his hand by breaking down a brush fence and driving through his lot, and damaged his back damages for injury to the fence and timber. Defendant pleaded that he was passing a public winter road, and denied breaking down the fence or damaging the timber.

The belligerent attitude of the parties to the suit created considerable interest in court. As the case involved title to land, and as the evidence was conflicting, the magistrates dismissed the case without costs to the defendant.

An enterprising crowd of spectators assembled at the town hall Saturday afternoon, to hear the case of Mrs. Johnson. It is alleged by the prosecution that during the election excitement Johnson, a Bell's Crossing Ferry resident, Philip Molt, a machinist and a member of the Liberal party, having been a Conservative voter to the point of voting in order to prevent his voting, sought every natural opportunity to injure him in the case in order to clear the election at the shoulder. As the trial was nearing the case arrived, its result to the parties induced one to accept a settlement, and in this they were successful. The facts of the case were as follows: Johnson, who had no apprenticeship, applied to A. Charles, Farmersville.

charmer, who requested him to hang his hat on a peg in the hall and walk into the parlors. After a long chat the visitor took his departure, taking as he supposed, his own hat from the peg. Until about the time he placed it on his head in memory of absent friends, proved to belong to the "old man" of the house. The mistake was not discovered until the next morning, when the question arose as to how he could effect the change without detection. A happy thought struck him, he would enlist the services of a young friend who paid frequent visits to another young lady of the same house. The two visited the house in company, and the eyes of one were delighted by the sight of his own tile resting on a peg contiguous to where he placed his borrowed beaver. A short time afterwards, when about to leave, he reached forth his hand to grasp his rightful property, when, lo and behold, it had vanished! The next Sunday evening the "old man" went to church, wearing the hat which our young friend yearned for. The "old man" hung his hat on a window sill, and found a seat near the choir. It would seem as if the hat had a slippery character, for before the service ended it slipped to the floor, and was slipped around and over and upon by dozen of feet as the congregation dispersed, and when it finally emerged from the church it possessed little less gloss than when lying in its box at Parish's store. The hat again found a resting place on a peg in the hall, and the next evening our young friend prepared for a desperate effort to regain his now damaged headgear, and once more called into requisition the assistance of his friend. Together they investigated the hot rock, finding the sought-for hat on the same peg as of old. Now was the grand opportunity which they should have embraced; but, alas for the frailty of human resolve! the smiling countenances of their informants were too beguiling. After spending a short half hour together, our hero grasped what in his abstraction he supposed was his long lost beaver, and made a desperate dash for the street, remarking gleefully "Now I've got it." On reaching the opposite sidewalk long buried his head and took one long, cautious look at his head gear by the light of the silver moon, and sadly mused, "I thought the luck!" and the coupon came to the conclusion that he would have to interview the old man "to make the change." The next day he wandered down to the shop in which the old man worked, and succeeded to convince him that the exchange had been made at the church. The "old man" disdained all knowledge of the exchange, but was happy to receive back his own hat in its original shiny perfection. It then dawned upon our hero that, as the two caps were identical, he might have spent himself all the money he had to buy one, and no one could have been the wiser.
