A London cable says: The coroner, is summing up at the inquest in the case of the last woman found murdered in Whitechapel, stated to the jury that shortly after the details of the last sitting of the jury had been published the sub-curetor of the English Pathological museum had informed him that some months ago an American had visited him and asked him to procure a number of specimens of the uterus. The visitor states int he would willingly pay £30 each for specimens, his object being to issue an actual specimen with each copy of a book upon which he was engaged. The sub-curator promptly informed the applicant that it would be impossible to comply with his request. The American still urged the possibility of procuring the specimens, and said he wanted them preserved in glycerine instead of spirits, in order to keep them flaccid. The request had been repeated to give evidence against Brown. The at another institute. The sub-curator had promptly informed the Scotland Yard authorities of the facts in his possession. The coroner expressed the hope that greater publicity would tend to elucidate the mystery, and that the publication of these facts in the American press would assist in throwing light on the subject. PROF. WILLIAMS' NARRATIVE. A last (Wednesday) night's Ottawa des eatch says: Thomas Wensiey suffered death here to-day in the most appallingly tragic manner, in the presence of twenty thousand horror-stricken spectators. Among the attractions at the fair being held here is a balloon ascension, in which the aeronaut, when he reaches the height of some two thousand feet, leaves his air ship and reaches the earth by means of a parachute. A great portion of the afternoon was occupied in inflating the monster sphere with hot air. A score of men surrounded the canvas holding it down. Just previous to the ascent, the aeronaut crawled in and got into his cage, arranging with the men that he would shout "Let god as soon as he was ready.
