A Remarkable Funeral. A correspondent writes ; At Manitou, a small town in Southern Manitoba, about 100 miles from Winnipeg, there was a remarkable funeral last summer, 1888. Not far from here is an Indian settlement. One of the Indians died, and of course the body had to be buried. There seems to the body fit the coffin ; they broke off the two legs between the knees and the ankles, Now, there had been a mistake in the length of the coffin, but that did not prevent there being another in the length of the grave, which was also made too short. seems they were impatient to hide the Sir John Thompson said the Bill was body, so, not waiting to enlarge the grave enough, the coffin was lowered and several of the tribe jumped on the rade box till it grave was now filled and a flag tied to a pols, which was fastened to a fence post, placed to the place whence that descendant of the aborigines took his journey to the "happy hunting ground." The grave is just onteids the cametery on the roadside. An Indian doctor performed the funeral ceremony. There was only one woman and that was the wife of the deceased. She seemed to be in great sourow over the loss of her life companion. The Indians tried to comfort her by offerings of money, and a large collection was made for her, after which they all returned home.
