That is what I said to him about the Army. Now as to his more recent notion-Theology. Here are exactly the same objections. War and Theology belong to the same age. They belong to the infancy of the race. The former is civilized by tramway used in lowering the granite to | progress to the extent of gathing guns and torpedo boats; the latter to the verge of sealing bell over, and reading the vicarious atopement and original sin out of good society. But in the nature of things, Theology must get its light from the past. It is based on a revelation long since closed. It cannot say, 'We expect to revise this until it fits our needs'-as in law, or medicine, or journalism. The religious lawrevelation-is sealed. A clergyman who is conest must go to the records of the dead past for his light, his inspiration, his guidance. The final appeal of any orthodox olergyman must be the Bible. He cannot doubt the justice of Jebovah, and be an orthodox clergyman. He cannot question the goodness of the Jewish God, and be true to his ordination vows. He cannot shrow over what may shook or pain him in she New Testament; he cannot maintain his mental integrity in discussing the mirsoles, and be an orthodox minister. It short, father, if Albert ever outgrows the creed of a dead age, he will either have to stiffe his manhood and his mental integrity, or he wil, have to throw over his proession-one or the other. Every one knows how hard this last is for a minister to do. It means a loss, a struggle, a painful break with many years of his life, with many means a vast deal more than that to a man we been otherwise.
