The latest returns of the British regular to about 600 men, there being now a little over 211,600 on the rolls, to compare with years ago. The cavalry are reckened at 18,200; the cetillery at 35,700; the departmental corps, and special corps raised locally in the Crown colonies. Beyond these there is the great Indian native army and the Colonial Militia and Volunteers; and these, with the home Militia and Volunteers, make up a grand total whose numbers have never been fully ascertained. All the regular troops are now principally confined to the home country, India, and the great garrisons in the Mediterranean and the Crown Colonies ;

Canada and Australia having no Imperial forces beyond the 1,500 in Nova Scotia, while in South Africa there are little more England and Wales, 73,000 men; in Ireland, 26,500 and in Scotland, 4,060; in Malta, 8,000; in Egypt, 3,400; Ceylon, 1,400; Hong Kong, 1,600; the Straits Settlements, 1,400; the West Indies, 3,000 strangers to have those little things to fall and Besmuda, 1,300—a considerable reduchome of the exiled Grenadier Battalion. Elsewhere the establishments of British troops are very small.

When to Answer Letters. If possible, answer a letter directly. This to the busy housewife may be out of the question, but at any rate preserve the letter, and before answering it read it over carefully, noting the questions asked, if any, and attending to them before you go into other details which may be to you more interesting, but can wait. You would consider it very rude of any one if you asked a question in conversation and no attention was paid to it. The same thing applies in your correspondence, for are you not talking returned from the Rio Grande, says he repeated "Oh, I never know what to say."
