It is the amount of butter fat that milk contains that gives this fluid its chief value, and therefore a J. Loucks just value of the milk. And this value holds good in every case, whether it is H. H. Elliott used for consumption in the family circle at home or for the production of fine cheese or butter in our factories.

Prof. Robertson, Dairy Commissioner, recently in speaking about the relative value of milk, gave this information as the result of a series of carefully conducted tests made. It was found that in milk containing between three and four per cent of fat, the gain in the percentage of fat becomes more important, as every two-tenths of a per cent. of fat would give about threetenths of a pound of cheese additional per 100 lbs. of milk.
