Will the Children Be Cheated

Delores Wing, chairman for the Leeds and Grenville Board of Education, has been quoted as being in favour of an all day, alternate day kindergarten, as opposed to the present half day, every day system. If implimented, there would obviously be a saving in busing as there would be no need for the noon kindergarten bus. hour It is the duty of each member to board costs in any reasonable manner to ensure quality education at the lowest possible costs. question here is, is it reasonable?

Is it reasonable to expect 3,4, and 5 year olds to attend school all day? Are they mature enough to cope with instruction for a full school day? In my opinion, the answer is NO. I fear afternoons will become babysitting and refereeing, as the children become too tired to cope, let alone learn. Certainly, in these early years, it is important to nurture a positive attitude toward school. I forsee those young gleeful smiles which greet you with 'Guess what I did at school today", being replaced with exhaustion, frustration and tears.

see, rather than instructional increased difficulty in time, a developing a routine. As the children would attend school three days one week, two the next, with weekends thrown in, it will make it difficult for the children and even more complex for working parents. And will the Children become bored on those non-school days?

In short, I see little good coming from the change, if it is to come to pass. It could also result in the loss of students to other, more sensible systems.

I ask any person, who feels as I do to let their feelings be known to board members and ask that they do not instigate the programme. Let us not cheat these youngsters of those happy half days of kindergarten.
