

Memories of Olivet

When hearts are crushed with sorrow,
Or loneliness and care,
When friends have proved unfaithful,
And the load is hard to bear,
Let us steal away in solitude,
And cross the Kedron brook
To spend an hour at Olivet,
That quiet, sacred nook.

Perhaps some gift of memory
Of the Master's presence there,
His crushing weight of sorrow,
Or agony of prayer,
May bring the tender sympathy,
The faith and love we need
To help our souls to triumph
In thought, in word, and deed.

Here we sense His fine example
Of submission brave and true,
To the Father's noble purpose
In His love for me and you.
Though it meant that He must suffer
On the Cross for others' sin,
Pay the price for our redemption,
So that Heaven we might win.

With what love he seeks forgiveness
For His weak and erring friends,
And accepts the trial and challenge
Of the cup His Father sends.
At the thought we feel unworthy,
With a sense of guilt and shame,
For the trifles we call burdens
Are not worthy of the name.

Let us pray for meek submission
To our Loving Father's will,
Knowing we can trust His promise
To forgive and love us still.
May we follow Christ's example,
But in case we should forget
Let us often journey backward
To that place called Olivet.

Sunset at Otter Lake

If we might choose a memory gem
Of beauty rich and rare,
A treasure which through future year
Would shed its radiance fair
Like peaceful benediction's calm
Poured out for love's dear sake,
We'd surely choose that pictured scene—
Sunset at Otter Lake.

A day of rare enjoyment fine,
With beauty unsurpassed;
A day we'll long remember too,
Was closing in at last—
While here beside the broad highway
Were tables, and some seats
Where we at once decided was
The place to serve the eats.

The lake so calm, like sea of glass
Reflects the sunset sky,
The beauteous tints of rose and gold,
Bring charm to every eye.
Our inmost souls were strangely stirred,
No words could e'er express,
Though on our inner consciousness
Indelibly impressed.

The streets of gold, the gates of pearl,
How near they seemed to be,
The many mansions bright and fair
Prepared for you and me.
We longed for thankful, loving hearts,
And tongues that echoed praise
For all Our Loving Father's gifts
Throughout life's varied ways.

Soon in the deepening twilight hour
We wend our homeward way,
While each with one accord proclaims—
"It's been a perfect day."
Oft-times in reminiscent mood
This wondrous trip we'll take
To see again in memory
Sunset at Otter Lake.
