OMAF SaysCheck Cattle for Internal Parasites

Ten years ago parasites were among the last thing considered when cattle weren't doing well. Now they are one of the first things considered, says Dennis McKnight, lecturer at Kemptville College of Agricultural Technology.

All cattle have a few stomach or intestinal worms, but usually cattle and parasites live in relative harmony. Action must be taken when this harmony is destroyed because of animal stress or heavy parasite contamination.

Mr. McKnight says economic losses from internal parasites can be high, especially with younger stock. "Damage to digestive systems and loss of nutrients to parasites leads to poor feed conversion, lowered disease resistance and reduced performance."

Depending on the levels of infestation, parasitized steers may gain .9 pounds per day less. Dairy cows can produce up to 400 pounds less milk per lactation than properly treated cattle.

Fecal examination by a veterinarian is the best way to detect and identify the type of parasite. Samples should be taken in July, November and March. Twenty percent of each age group should be sampled.

Veterinarians do not recommend routine worming. Deworm cattle only when they need it.

If deworming is necessary, veterinarians will prescribe either thiabendazole or trimisol. Both are sold in tablet, powder and pellet form. They can be administered as a drench, mixed in the feed or pushed into the stomach. Costs range from 60 cents to $1 per head. "This is a small price to pay for reduced disease and better overall animal performance."
