RIDEAU REVIEW

Guest Reviewer: Susan Keates

Shaman's Daughter by Nan F. Salerno and Rosamond M. Vanderburgh

In an evocative tale spanning seventy years, Salerno and Vanderburgh tell the haunting story of Supaya, the daughter of an Indian shaman. Born when the old ways were supreme, she must learn to deal with the modern white world, and watch as her children and grandchildren adopt its lifestyle over their heritage. An unforgettable saga.

It Could Have Been Worse by Peggy Holmes

The title of this book is its author's creed in life. Born and raised in Hull, England, Peggy Holmes emigrated to northern Alberta in 1919, one of the many war-brides to arrive in Canada. Here she describes those early pioneering years, with humour and vigour.

Glitter and Ash by Dennis Smith

Smith describes the investigation of arson in this novel of politics and crime. A full-time firefighter as well as author, he tells an enthralling tale.
