Sequently, have to go with the stack Review. crowd to the cities where business was being done. With their removal many articles which are now consumed in our midst would not then be required, the home consumption would be stopped, and the farmer would have to send the entire vield of his farm, with grain, direct to headquarters. any farmer consider the vast amount of farm produce of every description that is consumed in our com try towns and villages and say if i is not more profitable for him to have that produce consumed here than in Toronto, But if the farners in this vicinity burchased all they required for their consumption in Toronto, they would also ! have to dispose of their entire pro the following paragraph, which w ducts there, as there would not be commend to many of our readers, any person in our local towns to consume it. This is what would result if the principles of the Grangers were fully carried out, the total destruction of the local trade centres, and the consequent building up of the wholesate and distant cities. So that instead of bringing the producer and consumer close together, they would drive them asunder. We do not think, how ever, that there is any dangersuch a result as that foreshadowed coming about, because we believe it impossible to carry out to the full the principles of the Grang organization. A good deal of harm may, however, be done, as every purchase made dutside the regular trade channels, decreases the busi ness of the local trade centres, and consequently, diminishes home con sumption of home products. While therefore, the Grange organization may be of much social and intellectual benefit to the farmer, and through him to the community at large, vet, if anything like a gene ral attempt be made to carry out the trade principles professed the Grangers, much harm may done both to theriselves and to the business community. We believe that the interests of every farmer is identical with the progress and prosperity of his local market towns, and cice reesa, and that in building them up, by giving them Lis generous patronage, he is ting more money in his pocket, ten times over, than he will save by thanking away from home, even though he get the most advantagrous terms it is possible to give
